Comments (number of people reached, effectiveness of the technique, what you would do differently, etc.): Those who attended were from the community of Frogtown Branch. The polling devices worked in more than one way. The crowd was rather frustrated and borderline hostile. The polling devices gave them an opportunity for expressing their dissatisfaction by voting very low scores. As a hands-on tool, they were entertained by being able to do something in the public meeting. In the end, it was quiet obvious that they did not like any alternates. The District promised and followed through on developing new alternatives. What should have been done differently was reducing the number of choices to the questions. Instead of using a system of 1-10, a 1-5 should have been used.
